CAMP TAYLOR. We visited Camp Taylor at an early hour esterday morning and found that although there were between 2,500 and 3,000 troops on the ground, it appeared dull in comparrison to the past week. Now that the Seventh and Eighth Regiments have left, there does not appear to be that interest taken in the camp that there was previous to their departure, and we do not wonder at .t, as part of these regiments were composed of our follow citizens-young men, whose deportment and soldiarly bearing had endeared them to the public. There is still left, however, some excellent material on the ground, as visitors will see by going out there and

LEADER:-I have just read a communication to one of the evening papers. (the Plain Dealer, I think,) dated at Aurora, Portage Co., deprecating in severe terms the want of patriotism in that township. One clause of the communication reads as folows: "Nothing thus far has been done in reviewing the remaining companies on pathat town, either in raising fighting men, or money to aid the cause." The individual who penned the communication, of which commendation, which we noticed on the the foregoing claus is a part, if neither a knave or a fool, must be culpably ignorant of the affairs in the town from which he diers; The Continentals; Buckeye Rifles, purports to write. I doubt whether any other country town on the Reserve is better represented in this Camp. I have in my own company twelve volunteers from Aurora, and there are no better men here, whether corsidered physically, intellectually? socially, soldierly, or otherwise. The citizens on the parade ground, and Leland's Band of Aurora presented them with blankets before we came into camp, and since, each with a beautiful revolver and a purse of over $50 in cash, which was distributed among them. I deem it my duty to publish this statement, unsolicited by any one.
